Mr. Coukling Makes a Speech. Mr. Conkling has been pleased to un cork, and the grateful perfume of his graceful oratory is born on the springtime zephyra over a waiting land. The occasion was the May dinner of the Saturday Night Club of New York last Saturday night. General Grant was present, and in response to a call expressed himself very happily, winding up with some very earnest remarks on Mexico as a land for American enterprise. General Grant's remarks were well received.

Mr. Conkling, in response to his "health," conceived the occasion to be a fitting one to give somebody a piece of his mind. We are indebted to the New York Times for this report of the speech:

itting one to give somebody a piece of his mind. We are indebted to the New York Times for this report of the speech:

Mr. Conkling paid a graceful compliment to the Saturday Night Club, and spoke of the pleasure be felt in listing to Genaral Grant to the Saturday Night Club, and spoke of the pleasure be felt in listing to Genaral Grant work of the pleasure be felt in listing to Genaral Grant work of the pleasure be felt in listing to Genaral Grant which make the most intimate relations with our neighboring republic. Of Genaral Grant the speaker said he hash before filled it with his smoon." Seeling the soldier-stateman upon this occasion, and noting the earnestness and sound judgeneut with which he was urging the forming of closer relations between the United States and Mexico, the speaker was led to contemplate the many things that Genaral Grant and down the him back to the last Chicago convention, at which an unauccessful attempt was made to nominate General Grant for President. That was a convention to which 420 of the delegates were sent for a specific purpose, "not instructed merely, but bound in honor to God and man to discharge cerain obligations," and the speaker carnetsly, that the results of that convention have held this country and the speaker earnestly, "that the results of that convention have held this country ket 10 years." My Coaking said that the Sunty, "that the results of the convention have held this country ket 10 years." Yes, that days work has control to the Mason and Dixon line. It fought the greatest political battle ever fought. It was a battle heavily weighted, but the Rypublican system of the work of the can countries. "When these statesmen shall furn away from the great issue—the finding out of what boy or what girl shall have a place in the dovernment employ," said Mr. Conkling, "perhaps they will give some at-tention to our commercial relations with Mexico."

"Mr. Conkling's remarks excited n demonstration whatever," says the Times, and we can well believe it, for this was a social gathering, in which politics had no place. The good sense of the gentlemen present forbade them to applaud, and good manners restrained them from resenting the performance with hisses. But the sub ject matter of the speech is more remarkable than the inopportune time and place chosen for its delivery.

Always deferring to that "superiority which Mr. Conkling says characterizes the boss, in our judgement it is neither necess ary nor well for Republicans to keep alive the unbappy dissensions bred in the party by the third term spectre. What happened is gone-let it be buried. If the country scored a loss by the failure to nominate retrieved now by crying over spilled milk. In our opinion there was a gain to the Republican party and to the country, for some essentials were preserved. But we have no quarrel with Republicans who think otherwise. We make the point, however, that the present and the future are more to us than the past, and that nothing is to be gained by brooding over yesterday.

It is Mr. Conkling's wounded pride that nothing is to be gained by brooding over yesterday.

It is Mr. Conkling's wounded pride that speaks when he predicts a Democratic triumph in the country. He could not got along with President Garfield and be has not been permitted to put his stamp upon the prudent administration of President Arthur. He is known to be unhappy, but he ought to be shrewd enough, if not great enough, to conceal his disappointment and chagrin. He threatened to sulk through 1880. He may stand dumb in 1884, and still the Republican party be one great man and live we ought to see at once to the arrangements for the funeral.

What Mr. Conkling says about bosses and bossism is intended for a pleasing portrait of himself. It is so specious that there is no danger that it will take root in the minus of sensible men. It is not leadership that has been objected to, but that oppressive, repressive and repulsive thing which is so welt understood by the name of bossism. A leader advises, appeals, persuades, and in proportion to his success in this he leads and is followed. A boss commands, drives, distributes rewards and special succession.

commands, drives, distributes rewards and punishments according to his whim, and in proportion to his success in this he is a boss. A party ruled by bosses has a torpid liver and a dull conscience; it must get well soon or it will die soon. The Republican party determined to get well, and its health continues to improve.

Influence of The Soil on Health.

The influence of the soil upon the health of these living upon it, is brought out very plainly during the prevalence of epidemic diseases. That malarial diseases (like intermittent fevers) originate from the soil, is already accepted; and recent investigations show pretty conclusively that the germs of Cholora, Abdominal Typhus, Yellow Fever, and the plague are in some way connected with the soil, which is daily corroberated by letters from all parts of the country, stating the marvelous effect Peruna has on those diseases and in their convalescent state, John E. Courtney, of Corry, Pa., says: "I am still retting better, thanks to your Peruna and Manalin." Bee page 24 in "Ills of Life.
